

Jonathan Massey is an architectural historian and authority on architecture and planning education. As dean at the University of Michigan's Taubman College of Architecture and Urban Planning, he leads faculty and staff colleagues in educating some 700 students across seven degree programs. In this role and in previous leadership positions at Syracuse University and California College of the Arts, Massey has helped faculty, students, and alumni generate the knowledge and capacities to address the world's grand challenges. He is currently collaborating with colleagues to promote equity innovation--academic innovation for educational equity--and co-chairing a presidential initiative to elevate and center the arts at Michigan.